AND THE ROMANS

FASTEN your seat belts. We are about to land with Dr. Who (William Hartnell) and his travellers through time in yet another age, another place—and at first sight a far more pleasant one than Britain in the days of the Dalek invasion, or the planet Dido. For this is Italy, the calendar reads A.D. 64, and in the villa of a Roman citizen away campaigning in the Gallic wars the Doctor, Ian, Barbara and their new companion Vicki are taking life easy in the sun. But not for long. Dr. Who is anxious to pay a visit to Rome, while in the local town gossip about the strangers in the villa has reached the ears of certain characters who deal in an unsavoury kind of business.

Dennis Spooner, author of the new serial, has written many television scripts as a free-lance. Having contributed to Fireball XL5 and Stingray, and having been responsible for Dr. Who's adventures during the French Revolution, he is thoroughly at home in the realm of science fiction and, in fact, will shortly be joining the BBC as script editor for Dr. Who. Maureen O'Brien, in the part of Vicki—she joined the crew of Tardis, you may remember, when they found her in a wrecked rocket-ship on Dido—has recently been working as assistant stage-manager at Liverpool's Everyman Theatre. This is her first television role and one which offers her many excitements.

POINTS FROM THE POST

S-F on TV

THE BBC-tv serial Dr. Who is beginning to be an institution. At first its triviality made me think it was for five-year-olds and under, but now it seems to be acceptable adult entertainment.

Dr. Who tries to be science-fiction and yet it would insult the great tradition of BBC Television science-fiction series to call it that. It has not the slightest resemblance to such brilliant imaginative serials as Andromeda, Quatermass, and The Monsters.

My objection to Dr. Who is not that it is tripe. That is self-evident, and I will defend to the death the BBC's right to broadcast tripe. But it seems to me the programme planners regard Dr. Who as science-fiction.

I imagine they consider that Dr. Who consumes all the time they are willing to devote to science-fiction, and this trivial programme prevents any serious science-fiction being shown on television.—E. C. Cole, Birmingham, 5.
